

Hi, my name is Lucas, and this past week I had the privilege of being partnered with Lance. In just a few days, he's taught me more about myself than I ever thought possible. He's shown me the importance of patience, and — through his playlist of the same five songs on repeat — how to not overcomplicate having fun. No matter the time of day, Lance's music brings him joy, and he's always ready to break out into dance.

Lance's dance moves have been one of my favorite memories from camp, and I think I can speak for all of Green Team when I say that dancing front and center with him — all of us trying our best to copy his moves — was unforgettable. Lance completely pulled me out of my shell on the dance floor. I'm pretty sure I've danced more in the past few days with him than I have in my entire sixteen years put together.

Beyond all the music and dancing, what stood out most to me was how much Lance genuinely enjoys the little things. Whether it was hearing his favorite song for the hundredth time or laughing with friends in between activities, he reminded me that you don't need big moments to be happy — sometimes it's the small ones that matter most.

Before camp, I knew zero line dances and had never listened to Usher. Now, I know two line dances and have multiple Ushers songs memorized inside and out— and for that, I have Lance to thank.
